Home Experiences in Student Housing: About Institutional Character and Temporary Homes

Mrs Judith Thomsen
Published online: 12 Nov 2007
http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/13676260701582052

Abstract

The aim of this article is to understand architectural aspects of student housing influence students' residential satisfaction and a feeling of home. In this context, the significance of an institutional character of accommodation is reflected on. Architectural aspects and aesthetics of the physical environment are as important for defining residential satisfaction as location, housing type, and social and economic aspects. Houses are dual structures, comprising both measurable physical aspects and subjectively experienced aspects. This article focuses primarily...

Abstract: British postmodernist architect James Frazer Stirling's 1,500-unit, 6,000-resident Southgate housing project in Runcorn New Town in England was first commissioned in 1967, but it was only finally completed (in its final phase) in 1976, went downhill fast from then on, and in 1989 was slated for rapid demolition. The writer discusses what went wrong with the project.

Energy efficiency and thermal behaviour of attached sunspaces, in the residential architecture in Spain. Summer Conditions

Abstract This research shows the study and analysis of sunspaces behaviour as passive elements of architecture during the summer, taking into account that they are fundamentally passive solar heating elements for winter. This study is carried out through monitoring and ...
